Technology and Our Kids...Making Difficult Decisions

Do you ever wonder how all this new technology is affecting your child? How much television is too much? What if you don't let them play all these educational computer games...will they not be as smart as their peers?

At our general meeting on April 1, 2014, Lori Kearney, a professor from the Early Childhood Education department at Sierra College, will be presenting on children and technology. Hopefully this will provoke some interesting conversations and help us to know how to better parent in a world filled with technology.

To prep for the meeting and to just get you thinking about technology and its effect on our lives, consider reading the following article:
